Planned Giving

If you want to make a lasting, long-term difference here in your community, you may want to consider making a planned gift.

Leave a legacy
for the future.

A planned gift shows that you care about the sustainability of Exodus and want to provide people with hope for years to come.

You will give refugees and other forcibly displaced people the opportunity to start new lives here in Indianapolis for years in the future.

To make a planned gift, reach out to our Director of Development, Cassandra Sanborn:

Welcome Refugees for Years to Come

When you give to Exodus, you give refugees hope for the life ahead.

There are so many ways to make a planned gift to Exodus. Here are some of the easiest ways you can give:

Bequests

Including Exodus in your will or living trust is one of the easiest ways to ensure that you have the resources you need to support yourself and your family while building a future for refugees. You can leave Exodus a set amount, a percent of your estate, or the remainder of your estate after other bequests--such as those to family members--have been fulfilled.

Including Exodus in your estate plans can be as simple as adding one paragraph to your documents. Contact us for sample language that can be used in your bequest.

Life Insurance Plans and Retirement Accounts

Including Exodus as a beneficiary of your life insurance plan or retirement account is another simple way to leave a gift that will help welcome refugees for years to come. You can include Exodus as either a sole or contingent beneficiary on your life insurance account.

You can contact your insurance or retirement account manager to change your beneficiary information.
